Reaching for the Stars and Beyond.....RSB - 23

When we observe the night sky, the planets, stars and galaxies seem like twinkling lights and appear to be close together. We know that some objects are closer to the Earth than others and that enormous distances separate us from other objects in the universe. As we gather information from the farthest reaches of the universe, we can learn about its history. A chart on the life cycle of stars will be developed along with acting out this sequence. Students will investigate the origins of star patterns we call constellations and then will invent their own using their favorite objects or people. To study the night sky they will make their own star and constellation locators and learn tips and techniques for delving into astronomy as a hobby. Learning about magnifying objects and how telescopes work will lead students to building their own to use to study the stars. These and many other activities will help in reaching for the stars and beyond.
